Looking for some articles to challenge your more able students or to develop your own knowledge and understanding of the First World War…?

Launched in October 2014, the 1914-1918-online International Encyclopedia of the First World War has a wealth of information for teachers of the First World War. Whether you want an article to challenge your Year 13s on the role of the Arms Race in the outbreak of the war, or are looking to develop your own knowledge of the Gallipoli campaign, this new site is likely to have something for you.

The online encyclopedia can be used in a number of ways. Articles are indexed alphabetically but the site is also divided by themes. These themes cover pre-war, violence, power, media, the Home Front and post-war. These themes can be useful for encouraging students to conduct their own research and investigations.

The 1914-1918 online International Encyclopedia has contributions from many leading academics on the First World War and also includes material from leading archives from across the globe. Contributors include a number of members of the FWWCBTP Academic Advisory group who have written articles ranging from the impact of the First World War on Ireland to the Visualisation of Violence on the Home Front.

The website can be accessed at http://encyclopedia.1914-1918-online.net